 Prudential Securities Inc., Stuart Sklar, Martin Kennedy, Andrea Klein, and Ash Rajan
 Docker: 2002-010156

Decision: The undersigned arbitrator(s) have decided and determined that in full and final settlement of all claims between the parties that:

Respondent, Prudential Equity Group, Inc. shall pay to claimants the following amounts:
 -Simran Sahni - $141,897 plus simple interest at the rate of 9% from August 1, 2000 until date paid;
 -Angad Sahni - $472,619 plus simple interest at the rate of 9% from August 1, 2000 until date paid;
 -Mr. & Mrs. Sahni - $816,000 plus simple interest at the rate of 2% from September 1, 2000 until date paid;
 -Nasimang Trust - $10,400,000 plus simple interest at the rate of 4% from November 1, 2000 until date paid.

The forum fees of $124,500 are assessed equally between the claimants and respondent, Prudential Equity Group, Inc. In addition, claimants are to pay a $1,500 adjournment fee and $500 balance of hearing deposit.

The panel orders that the CRD records of Messrs. Martin Kennedy and Stuart Sklar be expunged on the basis that the allegations against them are false, subject to review by a court of competent jurisdiction.

After over 40 days of hearings over a period of 2-1/2 years, at which dozens of witnesses testified, and the introduction of thousands of pages of exhibits, the panel believes it is appropriate to briefly set forth its reasoning behind the award. The nature of the claims asserted by the Sahni interests against Prudential (now Wachovia) are set forth in the case description. In generic terms, this is a "crash" case, but not of a garden variety. No attempt will be made here to summarize all the testimony and evidence, which frequently proved largely irrelevant, inconclusive or contradictory. Briefly, the Sahni interests attempted to portray Mr. Sahni as an unsophisticated investor whose accounts were ruthlessly traded by his broker, Mitesh Shere, under the not so watchful eyes of anyone at the branch or compliance levels. Prudential argued that Mr. Sahni was at all times fully in command and control of his family of accounts and directed all trading modalities, including stock selection and strategy. Prudential also argued that its representatives lived up to the standards and requirements of the firm and the industry in supervising the Sahni accounts. After sifting all the evidence, the Panel concluded that the responsibility for the investment losses should appropriately be shared. One of the unanswered questions in the case was Sahni's failure to name as a respondent Mitesh Shere, or to offer any explanation why this was not done. The panel considered this to be highly significant in the overall context of Shere's relationship with Sahni, which was deeper and more substantive than that of a broker-client. In sum, it appeared to the panel that they were in effect "partners" in the loose sense of the term in trading the accounts and relied on each other constantly. This is evidenced by the tremendous volume of phone traffic between the two and credible testimony that Sahni was virtually a fixture at the branch office. This relationship (which carried over from Shere's days at Ladenburg) is also reflected in the opening account documentation at Prudential granting Shere trading authority, and which was crafted by Shere and Sahni - perhaps deliberately - so that Prudential could not achieve the appropriate level of supervision required of such discretionary accounts. At the same time, this close and obviously personal relationship gave branch personnel the false impression that Sahni was entirely at home with investments and markets and the trading strategies, including heavy use of margin, he was employing. As one witness testified, people at the branch were shocked that he actually filed an arbitration claim against the firm since from all direct observation there appeared to be no dissatisfaction despite crushing portfolio losses. This sense of security, however rational, was misplaced. If, as it appears, Sahni was in the office constantly, it would have required no Herculean effort for the branch manager or operations manager to visit with him, find out the kind of business he and Shere were doing, and get direct confirmation that there were no difficulties. This apparently was never done to any depth. Documents from a firm where Sahni had had accounts previously amply demonstrate the kinds of memorialization of client contact sorely lacking here. As a result, the panel concluded that responsibility for managing the accounts was shared by Shere and Sahni and that, Prudential as the ultimate party responsible and Shere's employer, should bear approximately half of the investment losses that occurred in the Nasimang and joint accounts. Concerning the children's gift accounts, the panel believed that, although Prudential acted in accordance with firm policy and written guidelines, they facilitated Sahni's raiding of these accounts to cover margin calls in the main investment account. As a result, the Panel awarded full compensation for the children's accounts, with interest, as provided above.

Remarks:

At the start of the hearing the claims against Andrea Klein and Ash Rajan were withdrawn.

The undersigned arbitrators hereby affirm that they have executed this instrument which is their award:
